

Concept Note

Anthropology is a holistic discipline which studies about human condition: the past, present and future. Human diversity has been best captured and presented by anthropology than by any other disciplines. The modest beginning about human curiosity to unravel the existence of life and its manifestations have come a long way in comprehending what makes us human and how meaningful our lives are embedded in everyday activities across the globe which were vividly presented in anthropological research studies. In this continuous process, new perspectives and paradigms in anthropological literature have emerged in with regard to structural inequalities, gender aspects, kinship, family, occupational, public health, archeology, linguistic and other social and bio-cultural relations. Along these lines, there is an upsurge of critical studies on resource inequalities in marginalized groups, minorities, and human rights issues including for the 'A' gendered individuals in the globalization process. In the endeavor to understand the human condition, anthropology is one of several indispensable tools. The immense nature of enquiry process of anthropology can offer innumerable hidden layers of individuals and communities for the generations to come if only, there is an effective synergy: reflective practice and connected research for any human sphere.

At this backdrop, this seminar is an attempt to provide a platform to encourage researchers keen on working on the contemporary issues and challenges related to all the aspects of human domain particularly in contemporary India. It also aspires to look at the questions of the extent to which the anthropological theories and practices addresses the current issues and concerns of the deprived groups in India. Whether anthropology and its conceptual approaches are enough to address the various socio-cultural and bio-cultural changes that we are witnessing in India. And lastly, what are the roles of future anthropologists in bringing effective measures for the implementation of the critical anthropological works/ analysis in the policy making. This may also help the researchers to make a critical assessment of their ethnographies and guide them towards broader perspectives over studying the contemporary world. Anthropology as a century old discipline in India has brought scientific imagination and rigor to the research study and eventual outcome in the sum of knowledge about humanity and human condition in India.
